Date of decision: 14/08/2001

ORAL JUDGEMENT

Heard learned advocate Mr. Bharda for the petitioner and the learned AGP Mr. Jani for the respondents. In this petition under Article 226 of the the Constitution of India, the petitioner has challenged the impugned order of detention dated 19th December, 2000 passed by the detaining authority whereunder the petitioner has been ordered to be detained at the Surat Jail as Class II detenu. According to the grounds of detention communicated to the petitioner under section 9(1) of the Gujarat Prevention of Anti Social Activities Act, in all, seven offences have been registered against the petitioner wherein the last offence registered against the petitioner was dated 30.9.2000. As per the grounds of detention, the petitioner was in judicial custody at the time of passing of the impugned order. As per the grounds of detention, the petitioner has been involved in two unregistered offences as it appears from the statements of the secret witnesses dated 15.10.2000 and 23.9.2000. The statements of the secret witnesses were recorded on 13.12.2000 and verified on 14.12.2000. Privilege under section 9(2) of the PASA Act has been claimed by the detaining authority. The petitioner was considered to be the dangerous person as defined u/s. 2(c) of the PASA Act. As per the grounds of detention, the petitioner, at the time of passing of the impugned order of detention, was in judicial custody because the bail bond was not produced by the petitioner before the court. Thus, though the petitioner was ordered to be released on bail, since the petitioner has not executed the bail bond as per the terms of the order, was in judicial custody and was not enlarged on bail though was ordered to be enlarged on bail. Alongwith the grounds of detention, the petitioner has not been supplied the copies of the application for bail and the order passed by the competent court. Instead of that, the petitioner was furnished copy of order passed in respect of the another co-detenu Shri Ramesh Vallabh. Relevant page no. 37, 45, 57, 74, 81, 90 are the orders and application for bail relating to said Shri Ramesh Vallabh who was the co-detenu of the petitioner. Thus, alongwith the grounds of detention, the petitioner was not supplied the copies of documents namely bail application and the order passed thereon by the court in connection with the petitioner in respect of each offences but was supplied such documents relating to the co-detenu Shri Ramesh Vallabh. Specific contentions to that effect have been raised by the petitioner in para 8 of the memo of petition. However such contentions have remained uncontroverted and unchallenged since the respondents have not filed any reply to the present petition.

2. Learned advocate Mr. Bharda has raised various contentions while challenging the impugned order of detention. He has submitted that at the time of passing the impugned order of detention, the petitioner was in judicial custody and, therefore, it amounts to non application of mind on the part of the detaining authority. He has submitted that the detaining authority has passed the impugned order of detention in mechanical manner. He has also submitted that the detaining authority has not supplied the copies of the bail application and the order passed thereon, alongwith the grounds of detention. Therefore, according to him, it amounts to non communication of the grounds. In view of such non supply of the material and relevant documents, the petitioner has been deprived of his right to make an effective representation under Article 22(5) of the Constitution of India. He has submitted that instead of supplying the documents relating to the petitioner, the documents relating to the co-accused and the co-detenu Shri Ramesh Vallabh were supplied to the petitioner which shows non application of mind on the part of the detaining authority. According to him, on the aforesaid contentions, the impugned order of detention is required to be quashed and set aside. He has relied upon the following decisions:

1. Ramesh Yadav versus District Magistrate and another (supra) reported in 1985 (4) SCC 232
2. AMrutlal and others versus Union of India reported in 2000(1) SCC 341.
3. Rivadeneyta Ricardo Augustin versus Government of the National Capital Territory of Delhi and others reported in 1994 SCC (Cri) 354.

Learned AGP Mr. Jani has supported the impugned order of detention and has submitted that there is no bar in passing the order of detention of a person while in judicial custody. According to Mr. Jani, the activities of the petitioner were adversely affecting the maintenance of public order and, therefore, according to Mr. Jani, the impugned order of detention has rightly been passed by the detaining authority and, therefore, this Court should not interfere with the same and therefore, this petition is required to be dismissed.

I have considered the arguments of the learned advocates for the respective parties. I have considered the contentions raised by the learned advocate Mr. Bharda that at the time of passing of the order of detention, the petitioner was in judicial custody since he has not executed the bail bond as per the terms of the order of bail and, therefore, was not enlarged on bail. I have also considered the next contention raised by Mr. Bharda about non application of mind on the part of the detaining authority in passing the impugned order of detention.

In case of Ramesh Yadav v. District Magistrate and another (supra), the apex court has observed as under:

"6. On a reading of the grounds, particularly the paragraph which we have extracted above, it is clear that the order of detention was passed as the detaining authority was apprehensive that in case the detenu was released on bail, he would again carry on his criminal activities in the area. If the apprehension of the detaining authority was true, the bail application had to be opposed and in case bail was granted, challenge against that order in the higher forum had to be raised. Merely on the ground that an accused in detention as an under trial prisoner was likely to get bail an order of detention under the National Security Act would not ordinarily be passed. We are inclined to agree with counsel for the petitioner that the order of detention in the circumstances is not sustainable and is contrary to the well settled principles indicated by this Court in a series of cases relating to preventive detention. The impugned order has therefore, to be quashed."

In light of the said decision, considering the facts of this case, there is no observations made by the detaining authority in the grounds of detention that any bail application has been filed by the petitioner in respect of the offences registered against him. There is no averment to that effect and there was no material with the detaining authority to have the reasonable apprehension of the petitioner's release on bail and to indulge in the same activities again after release on bail.

In case of Rivadeneyta Ricardo Augustin (supra), the apex court has held as under in para 4 :

"4. Though several grounds are urged in support of the writ petition by Shri Ram Jethmalani, learned counsel for the petitioner, it is not necessary to refer to all of them except one of which, in our opinion, merits acceptance. It is submitted that on the date the order of detention was made the petitioner was in judicial custody. The bail petitions filed by him were dismissed finally on June 9, 1992. He did not move any bail application thereafter. No bail application was pending on August 18, 1992. There was no other circumstance indicating that the petitioner would be released from custody. In these circumstances, there was no material before the authority to believe that there was a real possibility of the petitioner being enlarged on bail or being released and that it is necessary to detain him to prevent him from engaging in prejudicial activity. It is pointed out that according to the counter, proposal for the detention was sent to the Administrator on May 22, 1992 but the authority passed the order only on August 18, 1992 without apprising himself of the fact situation prevailing in the middle of August 1992. Reliance is placed upon two decisions of this court in Kamarunnisa v. Union of India and Hawabibi Sayed Hanif v. L. Hmingliana. In the first case the principle relied upon by the learned counsel, is stated in the following words : (SCC pp.138-39)

'The decisions of this court to which our attention was drawn by the learned counsel for the petitioners lay down in no uncertain terms that detention orders can validly be passed against detenus who are in jail, provided the officer passing the order is alive to the fact of the detenus being in custody and there is material on record to justify his conclusion that they would indulge in similar activity if set at liberty. We will now consider the case-law in brief.

In vijay Narain Singh this Court stated that the law of preventive detention being a drastic and hard law must be strictly construed and should not ordinarily be used for clipping the wings of an accused if criminal prosecution would suffice. So also in Ramesh Yadav v. District Magistrate, Itah, this court stated that ordinarily a detention order should not be passed merely on the ground that the detenu who was carrying on smuggling activities was likely to be enlarged on bail. In such cases the proper course would be to oppose the bail application and if granted, challenge the order in the higher forum but not circumvent it by passing an order of detention merely to supersede the bail order. In Suraj Pal Sahu v. State of Maharashtra, the same principle was reiterated. In Binod Singh v. District Magistrate, Dhanbad, it was held that if a person is in custody and there is no imminent possibility of his being released therefrom, the power of detention should not ordinarily be exercised. There must be cogent material before the officer passing the detention order for inferring that the detenu was likely to be released on bail. This inference must be drawn from material on record and must not be the ipse dixit of the officer passing the detention order. Eternal vigilance on the part of the authority charged with the duty of maintaining law and order and public order is the price which the democracy in this country extracts to protect the fundamental freedom of the citizens. This Court, therefore, emphasized that before passing a detention order in respect of the person who is in jail the concerned authority must satisfy himself and that satisfaction must be reached on the basis of cogent material that there is a real possibility of the detenu being released on bail and further if released on bail the material on record reveals that he will indulge in prejudicial activity if not detained. "

In case of Amratlal and others versus Union of India (supra), the apex court has observed that while passing the order of detention, subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority is required to be established from the record. If the detenu is already in jail, then, the detaining authority must be satisfied on the basis of the available cogent material about likelihood of the detenu being released on bail and not merely about likelihood of his moving an application for bail. In absence of such subjective satisfaction, order of detention cannot sustain. Therefore, in view of the observations made by the apex court and looking to the facts and circumstances of the case, there is no observation made by the detaining authority in the grounds of detention that there was application filed by the petitioner for his being released on bail in respect of the offences registered against the petitioner under the Bombay Prohibition Act.

There was no material before the detaining authority to have some reasonable apprehension about the petitioner to be released on bail. Therefore, considering these facts of the case, according to my opinion, the detaining authority has not applied mind properly. It amounts to non application of mind. In view of such non application of mind on the part of the detaining authority, subjective satisfaction is not established, looking to the facts of the present case.

However, learned advocate Mr. Jani has relied upon the decision of the division bench of this court reported in 1988 (2) GLH 475 in case of Nasimbanu. Now, this decision is in respect of lesser drastic remedy of cancellation of bail and the division bench of this court has held that the non consideration of this aspect of cancellation of bail as a lesser drastic remedy would not amount to non application of mind. Thus, the facts of the present case are different. Therefore, this decision is not helpful to the State. However, Mr. Jani has also relied upon the decision of the full bench of this court in special civil application no. 9579 of 2000 dated 4.5.2001. In para 41, Full Bench of this Court has considered the decision of the apex court in case of Amratlal and another versus Union Government (supra). The observations made by the full bench are that this decision shows that the detention order can be passed even though the detenu is in judicial custody if there is cogent material to indicate that he is likely to be released on bail. There is no dispute on this legal proposition that while the detenu is in judicial custody, order of detention can be passed but one aspect is also required to be kept in mind that there must be some cogent evidence to indicate that the detenu is likely to be released on bail and in absence of such material, subjective satisfaction cannot be said to have been established. In the instant case, such subjective satisfaction has not been established. Therefore, this decision of the full bench and also the decision of the division bench in 1988 (2) GLH 475 are not helpful to the respondent State in the facts and circumstances of the present case.

It is also necessary to note that alongwith the grounds of detention, some of the papers relating to the petitioners were not supplied to the petitioner. The copy of bail application and bail order at page 37, 45, 57, 74, 81 and 90 are relating to co-detenu Shri Ramesh Vallabh. These facts are not in dispute as no reply is filed by the respondents. This Court has also specifically verified the documents which are relating to co-detenu Shri Ramesh Vallabh. Therefore, it amounts to non supply of relevant material which was relied upon and considered by the detaining authority. It has adversely affected the right of the petitioner to make effective representation under Article 22 (5) of the Constitution of India. Therefore also, order of detention is required to be set aside.

Looking to the observations made hereinabove, according to my opinion, the impugned order of detention is required to be quashed and set aside.

For the reasons recorded hereinabove, the petition succeeds and the same is allowed. The order of detention dated 19th Dec. 2000 is vitiated and resulted to quash and set aside. The detenu Aiyubkhan Bahadurkhan Baloch who has been detained at the Surat Jail be set at liberty forthwith if he is not required in any other case. Rule is made absolute accordingly. No order as to costs. Direct Service is Permitted.
